Your passport for today's global workplace

A Message From President Randy Parker

In today's global economy, the residents of our four-county area need certain knowledge and skills to compete. Vance-Granville Community College is the most accessible, affordable place for them to obtain that knowledge and those skills. It has become increasingly apparent that in the 21st century, everyone – not just a privileged few - must seek education beyond high school if they want jobs and opportunities in Vance, Granville, Franklin and Warren counties.

And while we naturally focus on the needs of our local friends and neighbors, we must always keep at the forefront of our minds that the so-called "flat world" is our stage. In the past year, our instructors and students have been traveling the globe in unprecedented ways, returning with new ideas and experiences that enrich them and their communities. Our new Global Studies program and our Global Awareness committee offer exciting possibilities for the future. Meanwhile, VGCC has expanded its distance learning efforts, which can actually expand our reach to anyone, anywhere, with access to the Internet.

If you have ever looked closely at our college seal, you might have noticed that it contains three small circles. Inside two of those circles are representations of the two institutions that preceded what we know today as North Carolina's community colleges. One is labeled "IEC" for "Industrial Education Center" and the other is labeled "TI" for "Technical Institute." VGCC started out as "Vance County Technical Institute." But in 1976, VCTI added a collegetransfer program, and we assumed our current name. That is why above those two circles, you can see a third circle, with the letters "CC" for "Community College" on an open book. The book lies over the North Pole on a representation of the earth.

Our students and instructors who have recently traveled abroad would not have been allowed to enter other countries without their U.S. passports. In much the same way, a VGCC education is truly the required passport that allows our students entry into the global marketplace. On behalf of the VGCC faculty and staff, I am proud to present this report of how we have lived up to the responsibility of equipping our students with those passports during the past year.

What an appropriate image for VGCC as we strive to

On behalf of the VGCC Board of Trustees, I want to extend congratulations to President Parker and to all our faculty, staff and students on another successful year. Once again, we have seen how important this great institution is to our four-county area. VGCC is truly a jewel of the region, not only for the physical attractiveness of our campuses, but also for its key role in economic and personal growth. The members of the Board have been excited to witness and to take part in new initiatives, new construction and new programs, such as Culinary Technology and Bioprocess Technology. Changes such as these have come about as VGCC responds to the changing needs of our residents and businesses. Together, we look forward to contributing to the success of our communities by ensuring the success of Vance-Granville Community College.

Marsha J. Nelson, Vice President of Instruction, was selected by President Randy Parker as the recipient of the second annual Presidential Excellence in Leadership Award. Nelson has been an integral part of VGCC since 1972, when she first became an instructor in the Secretarial Sciences program. From 1979 through 1999, she served as head of that program, today called Office Systems Technology. Under her leadership, the program was a model for others across the state and attracted attention from other states and from Canada. In 1989, Nelson was named Instructor of the Year. She was promoted to Dean of Instruction in 1999 and named Vice President of Instruction by President Randy Parker in 2004. Nelson holds a bachelor's degree in business education from East Carolina University and a master's degree from North Carolina State University.

Audrey S. Stainback, administrative assistant for the Health Sciences division, was selected as VGCC's Staff Member of The Year Award. Stainback is a lifelong Vance County resident who earned an Associate in Applied Science degree from Vance-Granville in May 2004. She earned that degree while working full-time as faculty secretary for Health Education (now Health Sciences), a position she has held since 1995. Dr. Angela Ballentine, Dean of Health Sciences, nominated Stainback for the Staff Award. Dr. Ballentine cited Stainback for her willingness to share her time and expertise and said that "she continually looks for ways to enhance the various health education programs through effective communications skills." The heads of various Health Sciences programs also wrote letters praising Stainback for her contributions to their programs. Pharmacy Technology program head Carla May noted that Stainback developed the division website, was involved in the first annual VGCC Health Fair, and "never minds going the extra mile." Stainback was also praised for her volunteer work in the community and for her active role in Bible Baptist Church. Stainback plans to pursue a bachelor's degree with the goal of becoming a teacher.

Betsy Henderson, an instructor of Theatre Arts and Speech, was selected as VGCC's Faculty Member Of The Year. Henderson, who lives in Raleigh, has taught at Vance-Granville since 2000. She earned a bachelor's in fine arts from the University of Southern Mississippi and a master's in fine arts from UNC-Greensboro. A professional actress who appears in two or three productions each year, Henderson has won awards for performances with theatre groups in Raleigh. During summers, she teaches children as part of the Applause! Youth Theatre in Cary. At Vance-Granville, she revived a dormant theatre program, with the goal of bringing students into "the artistic collaborative process." Henderson's students praise her for her enthusiasm in the classroom and for her teaching style that brings out the best in each individual. One said, "Instead of just telling us things we need to know for class, she actually teaches us." Fellow VGCC instructor Dana Jenkins remarked, "Through her teaching, many of our students have been introduced to worlds they never knew existed. Instructor Crystal Brantley believes that "she has often been the inspiration that not only kept students here but that has also motivated them to continue their education and to do so successfully. She is truly a life-changing force for many of our students."

Measuring Performance

The N.C. Community College System provides an annual report entitled 'The Critical Success Factors Report' that rates community colleges on how they perform on 12 standards. The most recent report provides data for the 2005-2006 academic year. The report illustrates Vance-Granville Community College's excellence in the areas of student goal completion, student employment status, achievement of developmental students and general student satisfaction with programs and service.

FACULTY & STUDENTS

VGCC faculty, staff and students took global awareness seriously in 2005-2006, and that was most evident in three international excursions. A group of faculty and students embarked on the college's first study abroad, a twenty-five-day educational trip to Costa Rica during May and June 2006. More than one year before the trip, four instructors initiated Vance-Granville's Global Studies program and began raising funds for the trip. Lydia Powell, psychology program head/instructor and twenty-four-year VGCC veteran, arranged most of the tours, trips and accommodations.

Margaret C h a v e s -Smith, Spanish instruc-Steve McGrady, science program head/ instructor and Button Brady, science instructor taught lessons in their respective fields. "Costa Rica is > the ideal place to teach a course like environmental biology," McGrady noted. "The whole country is like one big environmental biology lab." Classes could be held anywhere and at any time. "Everything was a teachable moment," Powell said. To Powell, who speaks Spanish fluently, the most important lessons the students learned may have been "understanding a different culture, learning about the religion, the importance of family, and the love of the land." She also noted that students were asked to consider the importance of protecting the environment and supporting "eco-tourism" in the global economy. The group visited six different locations, which took them from the Atlantic coast to the Pacific, through exotic rain forests, "cloud forests," coffee manufacturing facilities, and banana plantations. "Every step brought a new thrill" due to the variety of plant and animal life, Brady recalled. That included crocodiles, howler monkeys, and the small, rarely glimpsed quetzal bird.

Meanwhile, psychology instructor Peter Metzner took what he saw as "a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity" to visit China in June while representing the college as a World View delegate. Based at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, World View is an international program for educators that partners with public and private K-12 schools, community colleges and universities throughout the state to help students succeed in an increasingly inter-connected world. Metzner was able to learn about Chinese primary, secondary and post-secondary education systems. He saw the strengths of their systems as well as the areas in which the United States has a competitive edge. On visiting a Chinese community college, Metzner learned that, just as in the United States, community colleges there try to make college education more accessible, and to fill certain jobs in high demand, such as nursing. China is rapidly developing its schools and transportation systems to "catch up" with the West, according to locals that Metzner encountered. He noted that most Chinese "put out the red carpet, and they were very curious about Americans." He brings back to his psychology students "awareness of Chinese culture, and of how the Chinese educate their children. It's understanding you can't learn from a book." Metzner feels that travel expands the mind and shows us our similarities as well as our differences. "I'm so glad that Vance-Granville is part of World View. It makes the world a neighborhood."

Metzner followed in the footsteps of Linda Barnes, who was a World View delegate in the summer of 2005. Barnes, a Developmental English and Reading instructor at VGCC's Franklin County Campus, visited three Spanish cities over 12 days: Seville, Madrid and Vitoria-Gasteiz. She said that highlights of the trip for her were "the beautiful architecture, the ability to walk almost everywhere, wonderful art museums, and the warm reception by Spanish educators and patience from the people in general." Barnes grew in her understanding of a different system of education and learned a great deal about Spanish culture, including a different "pace of life." She said that she returned to her students with a "broader frame of reference, enriched background knowledge, and cultural awareness, all of which lead to an invigorated teacher, enriching the classroom experience for students."

CONSTRUCTION AND CONSTRUCTION AND CONSTRUCTION AND CONSTRUCTION AND

The 2005-2006 fiscal year proved to be no less busy than the previous year had been for construction and change at Vance-Granville Community College's campuses.

Progress was made on a 20,000square-foot addition to South Campus, located between Butner and Creedmoor, after ground was broken on October 20, 2005. This was the last in a series of ground-breakings for new classroom facilities on each of the college's four campuses, which were made possible by $17.1 million in funds from the Higher Education Facilities bonds approved in 2000. When completed, the South Campus addition will provide five general classrooms and five computer labs. The Radiography program, which is taught at South Campus, will get a lab equipped with the equipment needed to teach students how to perform X-ray procedures. The Human Services Technology program at the campus will also move into the addition. Also as part of the construction project, areas of the existing building will be renovated, including an expanded library (which is shared by the college and Granville County) and a multi-purpose room that can be used by community organizations for meetings, banquets, seminars and workshops. The construction, which will also in 23 additional parking spaces, responds to overall growth in enrollment at South Campus.

On April 26, 2006, the new addition to the Franklin County Campus in Louisburg was formally dedicated. Classroom Building 5 was actually completed in December 2005, and first housed classes in January 2006. The two-story, 17,000-square-foot facility enables the campus to expand its educational and training offerings, particularly in the areas of Continuing Education, Basic Skills/Literacy, and Personal Enrichment classes, as well as providing space to add more general college curriculum classes. In addition to various classrooms and labs, there is also an Information Highway, or "V-Net" classroom, connected to VGCC's other campuses by fiber-optic cable, that allows an instructor on one campus to teach classes on all campuses.

By the beginning of June 2006, work was underway on the new 3,100-square-foot Bioprocess Technology laboratory in the lower level of the Student Services Building (Building 8) on the main campus. This state-of-the-art facility includes a classroom and laboratory with gowning and cleaning stations, a prep room and storage room. State-appropriated grants total-

ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

Vance-Granville plays a vital role in the economic development of the fourcounty area as both the primary center for training the workforce and providing direct assistance to small business development; and as a partner with other organizations leading economic development efforts.

The college is represented in the Henderson-Vance Economic Partnership, on the Henderson-Vance Chamber of Commerce board of directors, and on the Kerr-Tar Hub project. All those efforts are designed to attract and retain new industry to the area and to build a community environment that fosters economic growth and prosperity.

To compete in the high-tech knowledge economy, Kerr-Tar Hub planners say that they envision a continually innovating partnership between business and education, facilitated by local governments working together. The first site for the Kerr-Tar Hub's technology center and industrial/business park will be situated on a total of 1,000 acres along both sides of Interstate 85, adjacent to VGCC's main campus. Leaders from Franklin, Granville, Vance and Warren counties officially endorsed the Hub at a ceremony held in December 2005 at VGCC's main campus.

The Kerr-Tar Hub, a regional economic development project, is the first multi-county collaboration of its kind in North Carolina. Central to the Kerr-Tar Hub model is the role of VGCC, which will provide workforce training and education programs for businesses that locate in the Hub and workers across the region. President Randy Parker said the college looks forward to playing an instrumental role in the Hub's development. "We're excited about being at the center of the Hub," said Parker. "We're dedicated to providing state-of-the art workforce training and education for any company coming into our service area."

Vance-Granville's four campuses provide centralized locations for various gatherings. For the community, the Civic Center is home to Henderson Community Concert Association concerts, exhibitions, fishing tournament meetings, banquets, luncheons, receptions, conventions, conferences and family reunions, in addition to the annual Expo. In 2005-2006, approximately 30,000 people from outside the college attended activities in the Civic Center, and approximately 5,000 individuals used other college facilities.

The college also uses the facility for pinning ceremonies, graduations, student and faculty gatherings, visits by the American Red Cross Bloodmobile, testing and classrooms.

FOUNDATION AND

Thanks to various resources and contributions to Vance-Granville Community College's Endowment and Scholarship Fund, financial support is available to many of our students with financial need.

As of June 30, 2006, the college Endowment Fund had 293 endowed scholarships for full-time students, as listed in three categories on the following pages. One of the largest community college scholarship funds in the state, VGCC's Endowment and Scholarship Fund now exceeds $5 million in assets, including funds in trusts naming the college as beneficiary.

Vance-Granville Community College awards endowed scholarships to full-time students in three levels: Presidential Scholar, Presidential Merit and Academic Achivement. Part-time students also receive scholarships to assist with tuition. Non-endowed corporate and private scholarships are also awarded annually through separate gifts. These scholarship are listed on the following pages.
